When Kayla was just five years old, doctors found that she had a liver problem which was later diagnosed as autoimmune hepatitis. After battling the illness for several years, she was put on the waiting list for a liver transplant.

Doctors suggested that family members be tested for a split liver transplant and, luckily, Kayla's uncle was a match. The surgery was performed in July 2007 and Kayla has resumed the life of a 12-year-old junior high school student.

"I encourage everyone to register to be a donor," said Kayla's mother. "Organ/tissue donation is so important, especially for families like mine."
